BEFORE YOU READ THE SCRIPT

A quick note

Hi Mr. Ayush,

Here is the voiceover script for your ad.

We're building the whole ad in motion graphics, so nobody appears on camera. The voice tells the story, and the visuals (renders, plans and your logo) carry it on screen.

We kept the flow of the reference video you sent, because it works. It talks to architects about a problem they deal with every week, then shows them a way out. What we changed is the opening. The reference starts with "If you're an architect...", which is easy to scroll past. Ours opens with a line that stings a little, so the right people stop and listen.

You'll also notice there are no country names, prices or measurements anywhere in the script. That way the same ad can run in any market without edits.

1	Awareness	The first few seconds. Catch the right people and make them curious.
2	Valuable information	Tell them something useful before asking for anything.
3	Problem solving	Name the problem honestly, then show how your studio fixes it.
4	Promotion	One simple, low-risk next step.

On the next pages you'll find each part with a short note on why it's written that way, followed by four American voice options from ElevenLabs.

THE SCRIPT

Voiceover

Every new line is a short pause for the voice artist. Words in bold get a little extra weight.

01

AWARENESS

0:00 – 0:05

Architects.
Your competition isn't better than you.
They just have a team you never see.

> Why it opens like this. The first word tells the right people this ad is for them. The second line pokes at their pride a bit, and the third leaves them asking "what team?" The rest of the ad answers that question.

02

VALUABLE INFORMATION

0:05 – 0:20

Here's something busy studios don't advertise.
A lot of their 3D and drawing work isn't done in-house.
A back-end team handles it, while the principal is out winning the next project.
And clients don't fall for floor plans.
They fall for what they can see.

> Why it's here. Before we sell anything, we give them something worth knowing: the studios they compete with already work this way, and strong visuals are what get projects approved. It earns a bit of trust and sets up everything after it.

03

PROBLEM SOLVING

0:20 – 1:01

THE PROBLEM · 0:20 – 0:34

And you? You win the project, then disappear into it.
Modeling at midnight. Redlines at 2 a.m.
Your 3D artist quits. The new hire needs months of training.
And every hour you spend drafting is an hour you're not billing.

> Why these lines. They're the same pain points from the reference video, cut down so they hit fast. Anyone who has run a small studio will recognize at least one of them.

continued

THE SOLUTION · 0:34 – 1:01

That's why architect and engineer Mr. Ayush built AG Archviz Studio, your back-end design team.
You share the brief. We handle the rest.
3D modeling and photoreal renders. Layout planning and drafting.
Structural and working drawings. For architecture and interiors.
And because it's run by an architect-engineer, your drawings don't just look good on screen. They work on site.

No hiring. No salaries. No training. No chasing staff.
Just on-time delivery, while you focus on winning clients.

> Why your name sits here. This is the strongest point we have. When architects send work outside, the usual worry is getting drawings that look nice but don't work on site. You're an architect and an engineer, so you answer that worry before they even raise it. The "no hiring, no salaries" rhythm was the best moment in the reference video, so we kept it.

04

PROMOTION

1:01 – 1:13

Start with one project and see how easy it feels.
Tap the button below and message AG Archviz Studio today.
Your competition already has a hidden team.
Now you do too.

> Why it ends this way. "Start with one project" is a small yes, and small yeses are easy to give. "Tap the button below" works whether the button opens WhatsApp, your website or a call booking. The last line brings back the opening, so the ad finishes on the same idea it started with.

ELEVENLABS · AMERICAN ACCENT

Voice options

We went through the ElevenLabs voice library and shortlisted four American voices that sound confident and professional without turning into a pushy salesman. Click "Hear sample" to listen to each one. These samples are the voice artists' own demos, not our script.

Blain

OUR PICK

Male · listed as "Blain - Conversational Ad Voice"

Calm and sure of himself, with a little grit. He's made for short social ads, so the opening line lands like a real person talking, not an announcer reading.

Hear sample

Justin Case

MALE

Listed as "Justin Case - Warm, Trustworthy, Clear"

Sounds like a friend who knows his stuff. Softer than Blain and very easy to listen to through the services part of the script.

Hear sample

ID DtQLDxHbTiQTpVVanTy1

Cliff

MALE

Listed as "Cliff – Warm, Authoritative Narrator"

Deeper and more serious. If you want the ad to feel like an established, premium firm, this is the one.

Laurel

FEMALE

Listed as "Laurel - Warm, Kind & Confident"

Polished and calm, never hyped. A good choice if you'd like the ad to sound a little different from the usual male voiceover.

Once you pick one, we can record the opening lines in that voice so you hear your actual script before we build the video.

BEFORE WE RECORD

- [ ] Is "AG Archviz Studio" the name you'd like spoken in the ad?
- [ ] The script introduces you as an "architect and engineer". Is that how you'd like to be introduced?
- [ ] The script invites people to start with one project. Is that the offer you want to make?

Looking forward to your thoughts.
